

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one piece of emotive language in the text.

What emotions is this supposed to cause? List all the possibilities!

Considering the storyline of the whole text, which response might the author have wanted the reader to feel? Why do you believe this? You should link to other areas of the text to be supportive and successful in your answer.

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

Find one point in the text where you could (or have!) made multiple interpretations regarding the author's purpose and the effect on the reader.

Which interpretation seems to be most accurate?
You should defend this interpretation against all the others - what does it have that the others don't?

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.

List the reasons a writer might use:

- Emotive language
- Descriptive language
- Imagery
- Different sentence types
- Varied punctuation

Now, find an example of one of these in the text – what reasons might be attached to the writer’s language choice? Attach your reasons, and then decide which reason you think is most likely and why.